Can teachers really be millionaires? Though being a millionaire isn't what it used to be, teachers still often regard themselves as unlikely candidates for this kind of financial success. But people of modest means can build wealth over time if they adhere to certain simple strategies. Dr. Norman Cloutier, Professor of Economics, and Director of the UW-Parkside Center for Economic Education, presents three rules of wealth building by involving participants in an entertaining true-false quiz. He concludes by stressing financial tips for teachers. Come and learn what other teachers have been hearing. Your students can benefit as well. The economic and finance principles discussed can easily be modified for the classroom.

Also, presenting financial planning principles and strategies for teachers will be Justus Morgan. Mr. Morgan is Vice-President of Financial Service Group, Inc., Racine. He is licensed as a CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ by the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards and is registered as an Investment Advisor Representative with the Securities & Exchange Commission. In addition, Mr. Morgan is a member of the Financial Planning Association, National Association of Tax Professionals, and the Racine-Kenosha Estate Planning Council.

In addition to the Financial Services Group, Inc., this program is sponsored by:

Exciting Future Workshop!

The CEE will be putting on a workshop in spring 2007: Economics and the Environment: A Partnership That Works! This workshop will challenge teachers to move beyond the starting point of a general concern for the environment, to an appreciation of how economics can be used to gain insight into the causes of environmental problems and how economics can help develop effective and efficient environmental policy. The workshop maybe offered for graduate credit.

About the UW-Parkside Center for Economic Education:

In its second year of operation, the UW-Parkside Center for Economic Education is dedicated to improve economic and financial literacy by providing K-12 teachers with curriculum material and professional development that will enable them to more effectively teach economics.

Watch for news of upcoming workshops,
