

Latin American Immigration to the United States

Monday, June 3, 2019

Molinaro D139

10 AM to 12 Noon

Governmental relationships between the United States and our Latin American neighbors have a long and varied history. This class will explore what they have been and what they are today. What can be done to alleviate the “Crisis at the Border”? How are asylum seekers processed; how does our Justice System deal with this desperate population; how are such individuals treated in the Kenosha County Detention Center?

Professor Stephanie Mitchell joined the History Department of Carthage College in 2002. Her professional education includes a Bachelor’s and Master’s degree from the University of Virginia, and a D.Phil. from Oxford University. She teaches a variety of courses on Latin American history including Mexico, Central American, South America and the Caribbean; her research interests include Women’s History. She is also passionately involved in Voces de la Frontera.
