Two Tuesday Classes: March 7 & 14, 2017
10 AM – 12 Noon in the UW-Parkside Student Cinema

At the end of the First World War, Europeans believed they had crafted a peace that would last until the end of time. Yet, almost from the moment the treaty was signed, Europe was set on a dangerous path to an even greater conflict.

The Second World War was one of the most destructive events in human history. By the time it had concluded, an estimated 70 million people would lose their lives, property damages would run in the billions, and the world would be changed forever.

Join us as we take a look at the war as it occurred in the European phase of the war. Starting with the failures of the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, and progressing until 1945’s VE Day, this mini-history course will examine several of the major issues and personalities that were involved in the war, including the conflicting nationalist goals, the technology used, and the key engagements that took place.
