World War II — the Pacific Theater

Two Tuesdays: March 20 & March 27, 2018
10 AM to 12 Noon, Student Cinema

At the end of the First World War, Europeans believed they had crafted a peace that would last until the end of time. Yet, almost from the moment the treaty was signed, Europe was set on a dangerous path to an even greater conflict. The Second World War was one of the most destructive events in human history. By the time it had concluded, an estimated 70 million people would lose their lives, property damages would run in the billions, and the world changed forever.

Join us as we continue our look at the war, this time as it occurred in the Pacific. Starting with the failures of the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, and progressing until 1945's VJ Day, this mini-history course will examine several of the major issues and personalities that were involved in the war, including the conflicting nationalist goals, the technology used, and many of the key engagements that took place.
