What is the Hub?

The Wisconsin Innovation Hub creates a dynamic, interactive environment to support collaboration between educators for the purpose of student learning. The Hub provides spaces and resources to inspire curricular innovation and assessment, connect educators as they create and enhance the student learning experience, and support integration between two-year and four-year campuses. The Hub is designed around the principles of access, equity, sustainability and quality. Faculty Collaborative Fellows are available to you to make the Hub a virtual dynamic ecosystem. They have generated the following questions to guide you toward various initiatives that may represent a resource for topics representing your greatest interest.

- ▶ What are learning outcomes? How do they compare to learning objectives, competencies, and proficiencies?
- ▶ What are the learning outcomes essential for a liberal education, and how should they be assessed?
- ▶ How do I connect course learning outcomes to program learning outcomes?
- ▶ How can we design curriculum to be accessible to all students? (e.g., transfer, military, prior learning assessment, dual/concurrent enrolled, etc)
- ▶ What are the best practices in designing student learning activities? (inter alia, portfolio, capstone work, undergraduate research, high impact practices)
- ▶ What are best practices for assessing student work?
- ▶ What are best practices in general education design and assessment?
- ▶ What is critical reflection and why is it important to learning?
- ▶ What is equity mindedness and why is it important to advising?

ABOUT US

The Hub is currently housed in the Teaching and Learning Center at the University of Wisconsin-Parkside, under the management of Peggy James and Jim Robinson. Faculty fellows do the core work on the initiatives to create a space for learning innovations.

Get to know our fellows:

Tim Dale,
University of Wisconsin-La Crosse

Dale Splinter,
University of Wisconsin-Whitewater

Caroline Geary,
University of Wisconsin Colleges

State Liaison: Carmen Faymonville,
