

Online Course Showcase

Wednesday, March 16, 2016

12:00 – 1:30 p.m.

Walnut Room, Student Center

During the Online Course Developers Workshop, and throughout the summer of 2015, participants developed high quality, pedagogically sound online courses. At this sixth annual showcase the following faculty will share the noted aspects of their new online courses:

- Sahar Bahmani, ECON 366 Money and Banking: Weekly announcements help students by explaining what is happening during the semester and keeping them organized and clear on what is expected of them each week. I will also highlight the discussion board, the gradebook, and Aplia.
- Norm Cloutier, ECON 101, The American Economy: Using Google Docs and Google Drawing Tools for the submission of graphical assignments/assessments in an online economics principles course;
- Linda Crafton, COMM 463, Gender, Race, Class & Sexuality in Media;
- Jenny Keefe, PHIL 205, Philosophy of Religion: Discussion board usage will be highlighted in this course;
- Joe Pearson, PHIL 101, Introduction to Philosophy: Content on Cuteness and Beauty will demonstrate what can be done with images, humor, and very short videos to engage online students;
- Daphne Pham, BIOS 301, Cell Biology: Online cell is hard to sale.

Lunch will be provided.

Please RSVP to register for this event.

This showcase session is sponsored by the Teaching & Learning Center and the Provost's Office.
